

A Conversation with Beth Greenway

Author of
A True Princess of Hawai'i

What was your incentive to write this particular book?

It combines history and science in my favorite place, Hawai'i.

When did you become interested in writing?

I love books and am a voracious reader. About ten years ago I thought I'd give writing a try and now I am addicted.

What is the most frequently asked question you encounter as an author and what is your answer?

"Where do you get your ideas?" They run around wild in my head and jump down on the page.

When are you most creative?

Walking my dog, taking a shower, and talking to myself in a strange sort of way.

Do you have any advice for parents?

Having worked at a bookstore and loving kid-lit, I can help pick out good books for kids to read: mine and a few others.

What is most rewarding and/or challenging about writing children's books?

Seeing your words in print is very rewarding. As an artist (watercolorist) I am always enthralled by the work of my illustrators.
