Foreword Reviews Announces IndieFab Book of the Year Awards

Mt. Pleasant, SC (June 27, 2014) – A Day in the Deep goes bronze in the 2013 IndieFab awards presented at the annual American Library Association Conference by Foreword Reviews Magazine.

Representing hundreds of independent and university presses of all sizes, the winners were selected after months of editorial deliberation over more than 1,500 entries in 60 categories. This year's list of winners includes Garrison Keillor, Barry Lopez, Harvard Business Review, Georgia Museum of Art, B&H Publishing, Rizzoli Publishing, SUNY Press, Loyola University Press, Chicago Review Press, Valentine D'Arcy Sheldon, and Wayne State University Press, among others. The winners exemplify the best work coming from today's indie authors and publishers.

Honored book A Day in the Deep is Kevin Kurtz third book with Arbordale Publishing and the rhyming text takes children to the bottom of the ocean floor. Throughout the adventure strange ocean creatures are encountered and readers learn what it is like to survive in water with little to no sunlight. After working at the South Carolina Aquarium and the JOIDES Resolution, an ocean drilling research ship Kevin Kurtz is very familiar with the fish in the sea.

Arbordale Publishing, formerly known as Sylvan Dell Publishing, hopes to spark an interest in science for young children with their picture books released each year. The publisher prides itself on the many extras that each book has including fun activities in the For Creative Minds section of each book where parents and children are able to spend quality time learning new science or math facts. This section combined with the quizzes and teaching activities also make each Arbordale book a great classroom resource.

A Day in the deep is available in hardcover, paperback, eBook and App on the iTunes store.
