Eco-Lessons from Nature

New Picture Book Features Animals That Recycle

Mt. Pleasant, SC (February 10, 2012)— Whatever happened to that old pair of boots? They could be a burden to the planet in a smelly landfill, or maybe a Carolina Wren has recycled what seemed to be ‘garbage’ into a comfy home. Nature Recycles: How About You?, a new children’s book from award-winning author Michelle Lord and publisher Sylvan Dell features examples of animals like the wren who “reduce, reuse, and recycle” as part of their natural instincts, and asks the question to children: How about you?

Children are fascinated by the quirkiness and wonder of the animal kingdom, but as Michelle Lord has discovered, nature also has important lessons to teach them. Did you know that an octopus will hide inside a discarded coconut shell, that a woodpecker will use the spine of a cactus as a spear, or that a decorator sea urchin will build a jacket out of rocks and oyster shells? Beautiful illustrations by artist Cathy Morrison help tell the story of these varied creatures: elf owls to elephants, dung beetles to octopi; that all seem to have a natural knack for recycling.

Children who learn to care about the planet will grow into adults that take care of the world. There’s no better time than childhood then to learn the importance of activities like recycling. Children will see the ingenuity of these cute, interesting, and just plain weird creatures, and learn how they can be like them; this time not by roaring to act like a tiger, or chewing on the furniture to act like a dog, but by recycling too!

Like all Sylvan Dell books, Nature Recycles: How About You? also features a For Creative Minds section, Teaching Activities and Interactive Quizzes, providing further opportunities for learning, and helping parents to answer their children’s questions. Also, the facts in Nature Recycles: How About You? are vetted by experts and adhere to CORE and state standards, so parents can feel confident that what their children are being taught is accurate, and as always, fun!

Michelle Lord is an award-winning author that started writing stories when she was in elementary school. Born and raised in Northern Nevada, the eldest of three sisters, Michelle fell in love with picture books when, during an extended stay at a hospital as a child, she was given a stack of children’s books by her aunt. A lifelong fascination with children’s literature began then, and now culminates in Michelle’s own storied career as an author. In addition to Nature Recycles: How About You? for Sylvan Dell, Michelle’s other books include Tide Pool Trouble, A Song for Cambodia, and the award-winning Little Sap and Monsieur Rodin. Michelle and her family live in Texas and recycle regularly. Learn more about Michelle at her website:
